

MISSOURI STATE ARCHIVES: where history begins

Published by Robin Carnahan, Secretary of State

2,500 Missouri Students See Archives Alive!

“This is the best field trip we have gone on!” That is what Sheri Luna-Holland from Blair Oaks Elementary had to say after bringing her fourth and fifth grade students to the Missouri State Archives in April for Archives Alive!, a new history-based performance group.

Over 2,500 elementary school students from all corners of the state visited the Archives in April to take part in Archives Alive! premiere performances.

“Missouri has a rich and colorful history,” Secretary of State Robin Carnahan said. “I’m delighted that we can bring some of the stories of our state and our people to life with this presentation to students.”

Jefferson City actors Laura Morris and Jayne Dunkmann are the cast of Archives Alive!, and are known across the state for their educational programs. In the comedic guise of “Molly” and “Delores,” Morris and Dunkmann bring the story of Missouri’s history to life by telling it through the voices of early settlers and famous Missourians.

In addition to viewing the performance, many students toured the Missouri State Archives, including the Mapping Missouri exhibit and the “stacks” that house some of Missouri’s most valuable historic documents.

Educator Anne LaRue of Hatton-McCredie Elementary rated the performance “Above excellent,” while Teresa Galetich-Bayless of Ridgeway R-V Elementary commented, “Keep this program going, students were very receptive!”

April performances were sponsored by the Friends of the Missouri State Archives, with support from the A.P. Green Foundation and Target Stores. For more information on Archives Alive!, or to find out how you can sponsor a performance, please contact Kelly Smith at kelly.smith@sos.mo.gov or (573) 526-5296.

From the State Archivist

You hold in your hands the latest—but one of the first—changes in how the Missouri State Archives and its Friends organization do business. Our new journal, The Missouri State Archives: Where History Begins now supersedes The Record, which first began reporting on Archives activities in 1989. The Missouri State Archives is a joint endeavor of the Friends and the Office of the Missouri Secretary of State. Through its pages we will continue to let you know about our interesting new programs and workshops, our rare historical finds, the “new” collections we have opened for research, our educational work with children, and our encouragement of professional scholarship.

More importantly, in early June a committee of Friends of the Missouri State Archives board members began an in depth—year-long—study of the way our Friends group and the Archives conduct business and how the Friends might play a larger, much more ambitious role in helping the Archives achieve its mission of fostering an appreciation of Missouri history and illuminating contemporary public issues.

We are grateful to the Friends for their past service, look forward to our future, and welcome all who wish to join us.

Changes

The Record, newsletter of the Friends of the Missouri State Archives, is no more. You are reading the first issue of The Missouri State Archives: Where History Begins, a publication of the Office of Secretary of State. This new and improved newsletter will reach approximately 1,500 additional readers, and replace both The Record and the tri-annual programming calendars. The Friends will continue to underwrite publishing costs, but the new look and layout are courtesy of the Secretary of State’s Publications Staff. We hope you enjoy this revised newsletter, and we look forward to hearing from you with comments or suggestions.

The Missouri State Archives was created in 1965 as a division of the Office of the Secretary of State and is the officially-designated repository for all state records of permanent value. Its mission is to foster an appreciation of Missouri history and illuminate contemporary public issues by preserving and making available the state’s permanent records to its citizens and their government.

Access to collections is provided through the research room which is open to the public: Monday–Wednesday and Friday, 8:00 a.m.–5:00 p.m.; Thursday, 8:00 a.m.–9:00 p.m.; and Saturday, 8:30 a.m.–3:30 p.m. Written research requests are answered by the reference staff within eight weeks. Visit the Missouri State Archives on the Internet at: www.sos.mo.gov/archives/ The Archives is closed Sundays, New Year’s Day, Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas.

MHRAB Meeting

The Missouri Historical Records Advisory Board met on May 4, 2005, to award $373,246 in Local Records Preservation Program grants. Special guest Richard A. Cameron, Director of State Programs for the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, joined the group to learn more about NHPRC projects in Missouri and report on archival initiatives at the federal level.

New Online Resource for Land Records

Land Patents: 1831–1910 is a database developed by Archives staff to help researchers, family historians, and scholars identify specific land patents across the state. The database includes information for township school lands, seminary and saline land, swamp land, and the 500,000 acre grants. The project is ongoing, with more than 12,000 records remaining to be entered; e-volunteers contribute greatly to the work, which could expand to include other groups of Missouri land records. When completed, the database will span from 1820 to 1951.

During the nineteenth century, the United States government, by various acts of Congress, donated some 6.5 million acres of federal land in Missouri directly to the state. This public domain land was then sold by the state, with profits designated for various internal projects of improvements. The state, rather than the federal government, issued the land patents, verifying title and ownership to the parcels sold, for purchased sections of the donated land. The patents list the name of the person(s) who acquired the land, the purchase date, and patent date, as well as a legal land description including township and range, name of county, and number of acres sold.

The database is arranged alphabetically by surname of purchasers. Previously, only the Township School Land Patents had a name index; all other land patent records were accessible by legal land description. A brief explanation of each type of land patent is available online. (continued on page 4)

Electronic Records Education

Emails, spreadsheets, databases, and CAD drawings. Scanned images, digital video, audio files, and websites. State and local government officials throughout Missouri are learning how pervasive electronic records have become in government, and how these digital records can be managed and preserved.

Funded by a grant from the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, the Records Services Division of the Missouri Secretary of State's Office is currently in the key phase of a 2½ year program to educate government officials on access and preservation issues related to electronic records. Titled the Missouri Electronic Records Education and Training Initiative (MERETI), the project brings nationally-recognized experts to Missouri to present training on various aspects of electronic records, and consult with Records Services Division staff regarding ongoing training activities.

The first phase of the project included targeted presentations to particular groups of officials. In September 2003, Robert Horton, State Archivist, Minnesota Historical Society gave a program to the State's Information Technology Advisory Board (ITAB) on Electronic Government. ITAB is comprised of the chief technology officers from all

The database can be accessed at www.sos.mo.gov and will be useful for various types of genealogical and scholarly research. For more information or if you have comments or questions, contact the Archives Reference Staff at archref@sos.mo.gov or telephone (573) 751-3280.

state agencies in Jefferson City. In June 2004, Barclay T. Blair addressed the Missouri Bar Association's government attorneys on compliance and other legal issues related to electronic records.

The current phase of the project includes training for a wide variety of government officials from state, county, city, and other governmental bodies. A series of seven workshops, ranging from introductory levels to increasingly focused preservation topics, are being presented in Jefferson City. The first three workshops have been completed, and attendance has averaged about 100 people, well above the project's initial planning goal of 75 per session. Instructors for the workshops are all well-known and experienced practitioners of electronic records, provided by eVisory Consultants of Richmond, Virginia – Virginia Jones, CRM; John Breeden, CRM; and Dr. Charles Dollar.

For those unable to attend in-person, the information from all of the training classes, presentations, and workshops is being made available to state and local officials on the MERETI project website. The address is www.sos.mo.gov/records/mereti/. The web site also provides an excellent glossary of terms used by records managers, archivists, and information technologists, and other useful resource materials. Records Services Division staff members will apply information collected under this initiative to develop and present future electronic training sessions to state and local government employees, in the ongoing effort to effectively manage all forms of government records.

Project coordinators for the MERETI project are Jelain Chubb, Local Records, Greg Schildmeyer and Craig Kelso, Records Management.

The U.S. Highway System in Jefferson City

When Henry Ford revolutionized automobile making in 1913 with assembly line production, American culture was forever changed, as were the roads upon which his cars moved. Once the average citizen could afford to purchase a car, there followed a desire to see the world beyond one's home town and county seat. When car owners took to the roads however, what they found was a lot of dirt and mud.

It became apparent that state and federal governments had to look beyond farm-to-market roads and connect people to the rest of the country. Improvements and paving projects occurred throughout the 1920s and 1930s, and as roads were built, a new service industry devoted to the highway traveler grew literally right beside them.

In 1925 there were 250 named highways throughout the country identified only by color and lacking a formal administrative organization to manage them. To correct this situation, the U.S. Highway System was created by the Federal Highway Act in 1925. This legislation created a numbered highway system with uniform signage to be administered by state governments. Formerly disconnected roads were joined together and many sections were paved with concrete making traveling safer and less confusing.

By 1927, Missouri was well on its way to significantly improving its highways. This new system was a boon for entrepreneurs in Missouri's capital – with Highways 63, 54, and 50 running through Jefferson City, a number of new businesses opened to welcome travelers. During the 1930s and 1940s, cabin camps, roadhouses, motor courts, cafes, drive-in movies and restaurants, as well as full service gas stations emerged along the corridors created by these highways. McCarty Street and Missouri Boulevard (formerly U.S. Highway 50) remains dotted today with buildings erected decades ago to accommodate travelers passing through or coming to Jefferson City. Images of buildings no longer standing remain alive in the minds of those travelers. Structures such as McKinney's (later Tony's) Drive-in may have been replaced by franchise restaurants like McDonald's, but both the past and current highway-related accommodations remind us that Americans have a passion for cars, travel, and convenience when hitting the pavement. That passion which has not been lost.

Petroglyphs and Pictographs: Missouri's Prehistoric Native American Rock-Art

Carol Diaz-Granados

Missouri caves, shelters, and rock outcrops still show evidence of the beliefs and oral traditions of American Indians of long ago. Dr. Carol Diaz-Granados will present a slide lecture on her documentation of over 140 prehistoric carvings and paintings around the state, explaining how several sites have been dated, and sharing interpretations of the fascinating motifs and designs that remain from our distant past. Dr. Diaz-Granados, a native St. Louisan, is a Research Associate in the Department of Anthropology at Washington University, where she has been teaching for over 20 years. She has done archaeological research in Missouri and Illinois, as well as on the northern coast of South America, and is the author of The Petroglyphs and Pictographs of Missouri and The Rock-Art of Eastern North America.

A Frontier History in Song
Columbia Shape-Note Singers

Shape-note singing is a 200-year-old American tradition of lively a cappella music, based on traditional ballads and church hymns. This music features folk-like melodies, harmonized in an unorthodox style, and is a product of the 18th century New England singing school movement. Of all frontier shape-note tune books, The Missouri Harmony, originally compiled in 1820, was the most popular. Subsequent editions have been published, and The Missouri Harmony, 2005 edition was recently released. Shape-note music was written so that the notes appear in four different shapes, corresponding to “fa, sol, la, mi,” and was said to help people sight-read music. In addition to performing songs from The Missouri Harmony, the Columbia Shape-Note Singers will also perform songs from The Sacred Harp tunebook. Audience participation is encouraged but not required!
